CPR Being Taught At Two Local First Nation Schools

Posted on Tuesday, October 24, 2017 09:06 AM

Students on both the Whitedog and Grassy Narrows First Nation will be learning life saving skills.

The ACT foundation will be teaching over 200 students hands-on skills training in CPR and how to use an automated external defibrillator.

Sandra Clark the Executive Director of the ACT foundation says they have some great partnerships for this event.

The Kenora Chiefs Advisory helped with the hands on training as well Hydro One donated the funds necessary to purchase the training mannequins.

The ACT Foundation also partnered with multiple health organizations to make this possible which include AstraZeneca, Sanofi, and Amgen.

The group will be in Whitedog today and Grassy Narrows tomorrow.

The students will be learning techniques for both adult and infant CPR.
